

The Dad Factor

How father-baby bonding helps a child for life

Author – Dr Richard Fletcher
Senior Lecturer, Family Action Centre,
Faculty of Health, The University of Newcastle

New research into child development is producing some surprising findings. One is that in the first hours after birth a baby can be looking for its father. Another is that when fathers create a bond with their child from the earliest days this boosts the way their child's brain develops.

Dads Card

Dad's Cards offer a bloke's version of parenting contacts. They are a useful starting place for advice related to new bubs and being a dad. The cards were created by the Family Action Centre's Sharing the Magic in Learning about Infant and Newborn Growth Project, providing a parenting resource exclusively for new dads in the Hunter.

Dads Make a Difference

Traditionally, fathers have taken care of the financial support for a new baby. But as a father you also have one important job that no one can do for you—making contact with your baby—through talking, touching and just 'being there'.

This four-page brochure is for fathers in the early pregnancy period.

Being A Man Photopak (2nd Edition)

A brand new series of 52 x A4 black and white photographs of men and boys. The images show boys, young men and older men in diverse roles and settings provoking immediate and powerful responses to what it means to 'be a man' in the world today. This resource has been developed, revised and refined by hundreds of hours in classrooms and in workshops throughout Australia. Included is a leader's manual with group exercises and questions that accompany each photo; these are designed to support personal expression and interaction. Suitable for use by teachers, parents, youth workers and health workers.

Skills & Strengths of Indigenous Dads, Uncles, Pops & Brothers

A group of young Aboriginal fathers were trained over a three-month period with digital cameras and computerbased editing software, then went on to produce this DVD. With Craig Hammond as team leader they filmed each other as well as other members of the community and so presented their own experience as well as that of their community.

So Now You're a Dad

Craig Hammond & Richard Fletcher

When it comes to making that all important connection with your child, we know from our research that 'the earlier the better'. In this inspiring DVD, Indigenous dads from the Hunter Valley, NSW, share their thoughts on what it means to them to connect with their babies.
